

Solimar Santiago-Warner, MSW, LCSW is a perinatal palliative care social worker at Morgan Stanley Children's Hospital at New York Presbyterian, where she supports mothers, families and their medical teams as they navigate life-limiting diagnosis and loss. In addition to her work with patients, Solimar provides consultation and support to the Labor & Delivery personnel and works with the OB/GYN service to develop a patient centered curriculum focusing on perinatal loss for medical residents.

Solimar is a Doctoral candidate at NYU Silver School of Social Work where her research focuses on supporting diverse/Latinx families through perinatal loss. She graduated from Boston College School of Social Work and completed the Zelda Foster Studies Program in Palliative and End-of-Life Care at NYU. Solimar received additional training in maternal mental health and perinatal bereavement through the Seleni Institute and the Resolve Through Sharing (RTS) Bereavement program.

Solimar is a regular speaker on perinatal loss, psychosocial support in the medical setting and care with cultural competency. She drafts administrative policies around perinatal loss and bereavement and provides clinical supervision to licensed social workers and MSW students.
